Fengling Hu_week02 reflection

This week I started to learn the basic operation of Rstudio. The two labs were linked through the notebook, so I gradually got a preliminary understanding of the interface and operation of R.

My practice progress this week was very slow. First of all, I don't know how to understand a brand new language, and I believe I will become more and more proficient in the process of tapping the keyboard step by step. There is no way to remember the basic operations at once, and sometimes I need to go back to my notes from the previous class. But there is a process for everything. At present, I do not have a clear overall understanding of these basic languages, and I am gradually accumulating through those fragmented knowledge. What I am wondering is how to apply this knowledge and what these skills can help me achieve.

I was faced with the same doubt when I was writing the grading contract. I don't know what I can learn from this course, but maybe I will find the answer gradually as the course progresses.
